Network Vision Statement
I was a visual arts teacher for 11 years and was part of my country’s visual arts assessment team annually. At Purdue University I continued to pursue my interest in visual arts and examined identification measures, leading to the development of an instrument to examine teachers’ perception about visual arts giftedness. I have been presenting at NAGC’s annual conferences since 2013 and I am ready and keen to step into a position that will help to promote greater awareness about the needs of children with gifts and talents in visual and performing arts. I am passionate about serving these children through research and collaboration, especially in research to develop better and equitable identification measures to identify and help children develop their potential. I look forward to collaborating with other professional arts associations in developing programs and services that can meet the needs of these children within the classrooms.
